There are so many reasons to smile, dear friend. I speak in generalities now. Young people who band them selves together to the exclusion of all others are usually those who have seen very little of life. For instance, they have never traveled to any extent; if have never traveled to any extent; if have never traveled to any extent; it is safe to say they have never come in contact with men and women who have done big things. In a way you might say these young people, who are one-stepping around in their parlors and thinking that life begins and ends there, are to be pitied more than

You will find as you get older that the more people travel and associate with people who do worthwhile things, the more humble and the more friendly they become. You see, it is impossible to think you are "the whole thing" when you go home at night after talking to a number of people who do the big things that make for the progress of the world. It is also impossible to feel you are "the whole thing" when standing for lostance. thing" when standing, for instance, near the Grand Canyon of the Colo-rado, or, for Instance, somewhere off in Switzerland, where you can watch.

in Switzeriand, where you can watch, on a rare cloudless day, the sunshine lighting the glory of the Alps.

Life is more or less a series of circles. You would not have to go to the Alps to feel small. For instance, a young man who is the Beau Brummell of his own crowd might

WHEN THE CHILDREN WON'T DRINK MILK

Give It to Them in Custards, Milk Soups and Other Various Disguises Suggested

Milk is one of the easiest foods to amouflage into tasty dishes for children or others who do not care for it as a beverage. Custards, milk soups, cottage cheese, blancmange cereal and taploca puddings, malted milks, eggnogs, cocoa, cereal cooked in milk and served with fruit are all suggestions.
Here are plans for three meals for the children, each containing at least one milk dish, so that about a quart of milk is used for each child during the day:
